

Dr. James Sater
Associate Professor
International Studies Department
American University of Sharjah
UAE

James N. Sater earned a PhD at the University of Durham, UK. Before joining AUS, he taught at Al Akhawayn University in Morocco. He has worked on state-civil society relations in North Africa, women's rights movements and parliamentarians, political parties, public opinion and the process of democratization. He now works on Lebanese politics, focusing on questions of sectarianism on one hand, and governance and global migration on the other. He previously conducted research on Bahrain, Kuwait and the Arab-Israeli conflict. He is the author of two books: Civil Society and Political Change in Morocco, and Morocco: Challenges to Tradition and Modernity. His research has been published in several international journals.